looks at homes both inside and out and old and new. It explores Victorian homes and houses from the 1950s in particular, and studies the features that make these homes recognisable.
It includes a timeline of some of the main inventions and types of homes built in this period at the back of the

burglars debate the best ways to break into a house -- how to quietly break a window, why carding (using a credit card to release a lock) is still the best method and why some still prefer the kick-in-the-door approach. Even retired breaking-and-entering pros chime in with stories of their greatest successes.

House owners on the estate also pay towards its upkeep. About £4,000 a year is the norm. Some of its owners are martyrs to authentic mid-century style. Among the Barbican's groups is a free salvage store (barbicansalvage.org) which allows residents to reuse unwanted original fittings from each other's homes.
